For the Sake of Our Children

About the Author: Léandre Bergeron is a well-known author and activist who was born in Manitoba, Canada. He studied in France and taught literature at Concordia University in Montreal before moving to the Quebec countryside in the 1970s with his wife Francine to live a life of voluntary simplicity. His many works range from a guide to home birth to the well-known Dictionnaire de la langue québécoise and the best-seller, Petit Manuel d'histoire du Québec, which has recently been updated and re-released. He is a tireless champion for the underdog and has long advocated for educational, political and social reform. Parents from all over Quebec seek his advice about homeschooling their own children. In 2008, Canada's National Film Board produced a documentary film about his life, entitled Léandre Bergeron – With Hopeless Conviction.

About the Translator: Pamela Levac has a Master's degree in Linguistics from Georgetown University and has been translating in to French and English for over twenty years. Her work includes web sites, product packaging, press releases and numerous other publications. This is her second translated book. Pamela is also a writer and has been published in several Canadian and American magazines and academic journals. Her passion for education and learning has been a constant throughout the years, expressed through teaching, tutoring and developing curriculum. She is the mother of two children who learned at home for eight happy years.

About the Cover Designer: Madeleine Levac has a wide range of interests that includes graphic design, environmental and social justice issues, philosophy, music and literature. She learned at home for eight years and is currently in high school.

About the Editor: Wendy Priesnitz edits Life Learning Online Magazine and Natural Life Magazine (in print and online), which she and her husband launched in 1976 in order to facilitate the unschooling of their two daughters born in 1972 and 1973. She is a well-known change-maker in a number of fields and launched the Canadian homeschooling movement in the late 1970s. She continues to write and speak on the topic of progressive home-based learning. She is the author of nine books, including three about home-based education.
